As a result of this, they do not always play on the same device. In order to ensure that they all play the same on all the devices that they are being viewed on, all their components can be put into place to make this a one stop solution for all devices. In this way the method of encoding becomes more important than the way in which it is being played and this is where the video can be password protected. A video encoded with the possibility of password protection has all its components set to allow its content to be played in a different way. The video is given a file name which allows it to be played on all the devices that are being used to view the video as well as in a different way. The video can be converted to an exe file which is what a video encoded this way will be. This is done so that it is very unlikely that a person could just view the content of the video without entering the password that is used to lock the video. Rikki Ross provides a tutorial on Password Protect Video Master 9 Pro Crack. When it is password protected it does
